Needs your help

Twenty seven year old Mohsin Qayyum Shaikh, was recently diagnosed with Wilson's disease. Born into a poor family, he works as a Zomato delivery worker, striving day and night to provide a better life for his family. Mohsin dreams of lifting himself and his family from poverty.

The illness forced him to stop working three months ago. With his income stopping, he began using his savings for household needs. Recently, he was admitted to Jaslok Hospital, where Dr. Aabha Nagral, a senior hepatologist, has determined that an immediate liver transplant is necessary.

Wilson disease a rare liver disorder is often missed in its early stage, and as it progresses, a liver transplant becomes the only viable treatment. The liver transplant completely cures this disease restoring the person to normal life. Mohsin needs funds for the transplant . His family members have agreed to be the donor and are being worked up.

This strapping young man, who was his family's pillar, now lies in bed, teetering between life and death. Your generous contributions, can help cover the costs of his liver transplant and the necessary pre- and post-operative care. His treatment at Jaslok Hospital is being subsidised. He needs your help to live and achieve his dreams.
